HOCHTIEF subsidiary acquires new orders in the USA of EUR 213 million

Stadium of the Kansas City Wizards - Government building in Washington - High school project in Los Angeles

The HOCHTIEF subsidiary Turner has acquired three new orders totaling almost EUR 213 million. The US company is to manage the construction of the new stadium of the Kansas City Wizards. This project has a total volume of approximately EUR 116 million (USD 160 million), Turner's part is 90 Mio. Euro (124 Mio. USD). The company will also renovate the Federal Office Building 8 in Washington, D.C. for approximately EUR 53 million (USD 73 million). In Los Angeles, California, Turner will also undertake the construction of South Region High School for almost EUR 44 million (USD 60 million).

The future stadium of the Kansas City Wizards will be a venue for the Major Soccer League, and so will be used for top league matches. Following completion of construction work in summer 2011, the stadium is expected to offer seating capacity for around 18,000 spectators, and will accommodate an audience of up to 27,000 at concerts. It will be the fourth US league stadium to be constructed by Turner – no other US company has built more than this to date. In Washington D.C. the company is to renovate a government building dating back the 1960s which will be home to almost 2,000 Department of Health employees and staff members of the House of Representatives. The property is seeking to be awarded the LEED Gold certificate from the United States Green Building Council. Handover is set to take place in October 2012. The school in Los Angeles will consist of three two-storied buildings with a total of 53 classrooms. An administration building and various sports grounds will also be constructed. The project will be completed in spring 2012. Turner has already constructed 19 schools for the client, the Los Angeles Unified School District, since 2003, with a total order volume of over EUR 436 million (USD 600 million).
